Get ready! 4IR is changing and reshaping practically everything that human beings do

Fourth Industrial Revolution

Imagine a world of automated trains being used to transport goods and commuters and drones and robots used to do engineering work and to inspect thousands of kilometres of railway infrastructure. This is the reality of the Fourth Industrial Revolution (4IR) workers globally are faced with where robots can move faster and with greater precision than its human counterparts, making it a low-risk investment for employers.

More than 1.4 million industrial robots are already in use in industries around the world according to the International Federation of Robotics (IFR).

It is believed that the 4IR will result in technological, economic, social, political, business, moral and aesthetic disruption. South African's future development will therefore depend on how fast it masters the technologies of the 4IR.

President Cyril Ramaphosa said countries that do not anticipate and adapt to the changes of the 4IR will be left behind and find themselves less competitive as the 4IR is changing and reshaping practically everything that human beings do.

"It is changing the way we live, the way we interface with each other, the way we make things, the way we use the resources in the world, the way we communicate, the way we learn, the way we work and it is also having an impact on the way we govern and the way we do business," he said.

According to him South Africa needs to move with greater focus and urgency to develop the skills, human capital, institutions and strategies that are required to seize the advantages of this technological change.

The National Economic Development and Labour Council (Nedlac) released a report titled Futures of work in South Africa in March in which it considered the 4IR's impact on poverty, unemployment and inequality in South Africa.

According to the report life-long learning is key to your survival in any workplace. Currently less than 0.5% of the world's adult population controls some 40% of the world's wealth.

The impact of global climate change is increasingly being felt in South Africa with the destabilising effects of higher surface temperatures, crop losses, drought, demographic shifts and hunger.

The International Labour Organisation (ILO) identified unique challenges for South Africa considering that the country remains one of the most unequal societies in the world. Much of this inequality is structural and is perpetuated due to wage differentials with unacceptably high levels of unemployment which burdens especially the youth.

On the other hand, the country ranks among the best in the world when it comes to scientific research and innovation. There is no reason why the country can't take the lead in innovation and producing new technologies for the 4IR.

According to the ILO, South Africa needs all hands on the deck – Government, private sector, labour, civil society, religious society and other formations not to miss out on the new 4IR opportunities.

As Labour we will need new skills, new curriculums and a new mind shift to grab on to the future of work. Currently the bulk of people of working age in our country have completed less than 12 years of schooling. 🇿🇦

Goodbye to a dear UNTU colleague and friend

It is with a sad heart that the employees and members of UNTU had to say goodbye to Deputy General Secretary Pieter Greyling (65) who retired at the end of May after serving the Union for twelve years.

According to Steve Harris, General Secretary of UNTU, the Union realises that the time has come for Pieter to spend time with his wife, Debbie, and children and to enjoy his many hobbies without worrying about the interest of the UNTU members and its staff first.

"We will miss your wisdom, knowledgeable approach, kindness and expertise dearly, not only to our membership but also to the staff of the Union who you represented as their shop steward for several years.

"It is never easy to say goodbye. But we know at UNTU you will always be just a phone call away, prepared to share your wise words with us when we need them," Harris said.

Various staff members said they will remember Pieter for his exceptional ability to remain calm and focussed even faced with the most difficult of challenges, never losing his temper and never complaining about whatever tough situations life threw at him.

"I leave UNTU after a combined service period with Transnet/SAA of 47 years and six months and with no regrets. I look back over a career of working in the Human Resources Department to the position of Deputy General Secretary at UNTU with fond memories during hard times that were fortunately largely overshadowed by good times," he said. 🇿🇦

Service delivery will remain our focus; we will not be distracted

UNTU members, it is with great appreciation and respect for your loyalty that I would like to thank each of you from the bottom of my heart.

As your President I am humbled by the trust given and confidence shown in my leadership of the most progressive Union in the transport sector.

It has been a rough few months at the steer of our multi-racial, diverse and non-political affiliated Union.

On the one hand our membership office had to do monthly verification of membership exercises with Numsa refusing to accept that with a membership of less than 2% they don't have sufficient representation in Transnet or in Prasa to be recognised.

At the same time individual opportunists at our rival union, SATAWU, decided to target the colour of the skin of some of our Executive Council members to save their own union from losing its recognition in the Transnet Bargaining Council due to its ailing membership.

In one incident photographs were taken from a laptop screen of a letter I wrote to the members of the Exco and our Full-time Trade Union Representatives to remind them not to be distracted, but to stay focused on our core responsibility: service delivery to 37 000 members at several entities.

These photographs where shared on the extremely popular Transnet employees' Facebook group, Mjanji, with populist comments being made that UNTU is afraid.

The same individuals spreading the rumours about UNTU did not even bother to mention that SATAWU was allegedly used to launder R65 million in pensions that was allegedly plundered from impoverished orphans of deceased mine workers.

On top of this, UNTU had to approach the Registrar of Labour to postpone our Congress with a year due to several non-functional branches. The culprits did not take the news well. Excellent service delivery to our members are non-negotiable.

All of this created a perfect storm to be used against your proud Union.

With some members they succeeded. We don't mind. UNTU will welcome them back after they have been disillusioned.

For the rest of our loyal members, I thank you. I have the privilege to continue serving you.

Exco members on the move

UNTU President Wyndham Evans and Wielligh Meyer, Executive Council Member, visited UNTU members in Tzaneen.

Wyndham Evans, President of UNTU, and Executive Council Members Fasani Mabaso and Wielligh Meyer, visited UNTU members in Danskraal.

National Organiser Maria Chonco and Obert Mudalahothe joined forces with representatives from TransAfrica to recruit new members in Ogies and Witbank.

Let's stand together to bring the President to the table

UNTU is calling on all South Africans to participate in the planned national strike on 26 July to bring the country to a standstill.

It is time for all South Africans to take a stand and embark on a protected strike action to demand that Government provide workers with a safe and reliable passenger rail service.

Only when all workers can depend on passenger trains to travel to and from work, will South Africa make strides in alleviating the country's unemployment rate that has increased with 0.5% to 27,6% in the first three months of this year.

Over the past three years UNTU has exhausted all other possible avenues to try and address the crisis the Passenger Rail Agency of South Africa (Prasa) is faced with in addressing the challenges experienced by its employees, our members, daily.

The facts presented to the National Economic Development and Labour Council (Nedlac) by the various stakeholders on behalf of Government, indicated that we are fighting a losing battle if President Cyril Ramaphosa himself does not come to the table to find a sustainable solution.

The turnaround strategies presented by the Department of Transport and Prasa with the guidance from the Railway Safety Regulator (RSR) will be meaningless if the President does not instruct the South African Police Service (SAPS) to protect the railway infrastructure. It is after all funded with taxpayer's money.

Currently the SAPS ignore the pleas of the poorest of the poor, saying they are not security guards. The SAPS have forgotten their constitutional mandate: to prevent, combat and investigate crime, maintain public order, protect and secure the inhabitants of the Republic and their property, and uphold the Constitution and enforce the law.

Only the President can deploy the South African National Defence Force (SANDF) to step up and safeguard this critical national asset where the police have failed us.

Let's stand together to bring the President to the table.

Zonke receives Top Achiever Award

It's been a long road for UNTU Executive Council Member Zonke Cebekhulu (43) since she started working for Transnet Engineering as a maintenance assistant 18 years ago. This wife and mother of three children who also provides for her extended family members, has just received the Top Achiever Award when she completed her Labour Studies. But this motivational speaker who represents UNTU on the Social Justice Committee of the Federation of Trade Unions of South Africa (Fedusa), did not stop there. She is currently busy with a Certificate in Business Administration which includes modules on Labour Law, Financial Management, Economics and Human Resources. Riefdah Ajam, Acting General Secretary of Fedusa, thanked Zonke for keeping the name of women in the Federation flying high by setting an example of being a full-time trade union activist on a national level, being a wife, being a mother and still managing to make time to equip herself better for the challenges that the Fourth Industrial Revolution will present. Zonke says she believes that her position as an Executive Council Member of UNTU requires her to engage with people globally and locally on all levels and on all subjects. "You need to be sharp and have a broad understanding of what is trending all over the world." Her golden rule for staying on top of her game is to sleep eight hours per night, irrespective of where she is and what she must do. "I realise that in order to maintain my diary, I must allow my body time to recover and to rest. "I have a mentor who teaches me how to do my diary planning to ensure that I make time for everything that is important to me. Routine is key. When I need to work, I work. When I get home, my family comes first." Zonke is very proud of all her achievements and continues to play a vital role in her community in projects to uplift the youth and women in general. Her only regret is that she did not start with this earlier in her life as she would have been much further in her efforts to make a difference. Her message to UNTU's female members is to support and carry each other as women. "In whatever we do, always remember we are not alone. We must support each other to ensure that we achieve more."

Transnet & Gupta links

Shocking revelations presented to Zondo Commission

Transnet and its links with the Gupta family resulted in the loss of millions for blatantly disregarding its own processes and procedures.

This was just some of the shocking revelations of the derailment of the State-Owned Enterprise (SOE) and the extent of how the Guptas milked the parastatal for money that was presented in evidence to Deputy Chief Justice Raymond Zondo at the Zondo Commission of Inquiry into Allegations of State Capture.

"It appears there was [a] blatant disregard of procedures and processes which are put in place to minimise chances for abuse for corruption and of minimising losses at Transnet and unless somebody comes up with a sound explanation... it appears to be a blatant disregard of processes," Judge Zondo said.

The Commission received 17 reports to provide an overview of the fraud and corruption at Transnet.

Chinese North Rail Consortium

Judge Zondo immediately referred the "R647 million adjustment to a Transnet deal" to the Hawks, the Directorate for Priority Crime Investigation at the South African Police Service (SAPS). The Commission heard that a case was opened with the Hawks in 2017, but there was no progress in the investigation.

Roberto Gonsalves, whose company was part of the Chinese North Rail (CNR) Consortium that entered into an agreement with Transnet for the supply of 232 of the 465 diesel locomotives, at a contract price of R42 million per locomotive, testified that the total cost was R9.7 billion.

Gonsalves told the Commission Transnet requested that the project be moved from Pretoria to Durban 10 days before the consortium submitted its final tender documents. According to him, the minority shareholders were then approached by CNR majority shareholders and asked to sign an agreement which would appoint a company called Bex as an agent to negotiate with Transnet over the relocation bill.

Gonsalves said they protested over the agreement and Bex's involvement because the company seemed to be a shelf company with one director. Gonsalves said the majority shareholders went ahead with appointing Bex regardless of the objections and the cost ballooned to R647 million. Bex received R67 million of the payment.

Chinese South Rail

Retired Transnet electrical engineer Francis Callard testified how Transnet bent its procurement rules to favour the Gupta-linked China South Rail (CSR). He recommended the Japanese railway freight vehicles and locomotives company Mitsui. Callard worked for Transnet for 45 years.

Callard said he prepared a memorandum for approval by former Transnet Chief Group Executive Officer (CEO) Siyabonga Gama. He alleged that Transnet's suspended Supply Chain Manager, Lindiwe Mdletshe, removed the benefit of the standardisation of the locomotives, which had two elements, namely operational and maintenance standardisation.

The whole section was deleted and replaced with a claim that CSR has been adjudicated to be the best bidder.

According to him CSR did not meet the requirements when it was awarded the contract.

Regiments Capital

Transnet former finance boss Anoj Singh "had no authority" to appoint the Gupta-linked firm, Regiments Capital, as a transaction adviser for the controversial multibillion-rand procurement of 1 064 locomotives.

MNS Attorneys boss Tshiamo Sedumedi testified that they were one of the companies appointed by Transnet's new board in 2018 to investigate various contracts awarded during previous administrations led by former bosses Brian Molefe and Gama.

According to Sedumedi their investigation found that in May 2012, Transnet issued a request for proposal (RFP) for transaction advisers – one of the criteria for a successful bid being that a company should submit audited financial statements for three years. Although McKinsey did not do so, a consortium of companies that it led was eventually appointed.

Later that year, in August, Singh compiled a memorandum and forwarded it to Molefe. It detailed a conflict of interest between two companies in McKinsey's consortium, Letsema and Barloworld, and advised that Letsema be replaced by another entity. This was before the contract was awarded to McKinsey's consortium. Then, in December 2012, Transnet concluded a letter of intent (LOI) appointing the McKinsey consortium as a transaction adviser. Letsema had by this time been replaced by Regiments Capital, a company run by Gupta family associate Niven Pillay.

Homix

Gupta-linked letterbox company Homix received R25 million to seal a deal between Transnet and Neotel. Former Transnet employee Gerhard van der Westhuizen testified before the Commission that Transnet was a "captive client" and had no choice but to contract Neotel in 2014 to buy back assets the state-owned company sold off five years prior.

The Commission referred to a letter from Homix in 2014 that was forwarded to Neotel. The letter details an agreement detailing how the communications company would pay Homix up to R25 million to assist it with closing a R1.8 billion deal with Transnet.

Transnet, at the time, withdrew from negotiations with Neotel without giving reasons. Just a day after Neotel signed with Homix, Transnet returned to the negotiating table and Neotel got the contract.

Neotel scored a R4.9 billion contract from Transnet to upgrade CCTV systems at the country's ports without a competitive bidding process being finalised.

Determination defeats disability

Para-power lifter Peter has his eyes set on Paralympic Games in Japan

Peter Moagi (46), a para-power lifter and senior administrator at Transnet Pyramid South, is determined to represent South Africa at the 2020 Paralympic Games in Tokyo, Japan.

He is currently lifting 120 kg, but he is training very hard to achieve his personal goal to lift 160 kg.

"The golden rule is to stay mentally focussed. When I train, I use my headphones so that I am not distracted. I practise my technique to ensure that I lift the weight in perfect balance.

"I am also working hard to lose more weight. I have already lost 9 kg by eating healthy, drinking lots of water and ensuring that I get enough sleep. It is hard work, but I am determined to inspire other disabled people by achieving my dream," he says.

Peter's right leg was amputated after a car accident on his 21st birthday in 1993. He struggled to cope with the reality of this life-changing experience.

His dream of becoming a weatherman was shattered.

"I isolated myself and was very depressed. It took me about two years to accept my condition and to move on with my life.

"I heard about the Filadelfia Secondary School for the physically disabled. I went there to get in contact with other disabled people. It completely changed my outlook on life. Suddenly I realised that I have so much to be grateful for. There are others who suffer from severe disability and I am much more fortunate than them. It lifted my spirit."

It was at the school where Peter met his best friend and now wife, Jackie Mmasithi, whose left leg was amputated after an accident.

"Jackie encouraged me to go back to school and finish my matric. I did so, a decade later. Afterward I managed to get a job at Transnet," says Peter.

He joined UNTU when he started working for Transnet in 2012 and he is very happy with the Union. 🇿🇦

Eugene Havenga

22 Comrades Marathons and counting for Eugene

Eugene Havenga did it again. He completed his 22nd Comrades Marathon this year from Durban to Pietermaritzburg. Although this 56-year-old husband of Manette Havenga makes the marathon look easy, this endurance race is much more than just another marathon.

"Endurance and mental focus are key. You have to have the strength, stamina and courage to continue even if you are experiencing pain to be able to complete the marathon," Eugene says.

This year 20 000 runners participated in the 87 km journey from Durban to Pietermaritzburg. Next year their son, Ian, plans to join the family of Comrades runners and join his dad in the race.

Father and son already train together. "It is very special to have my son following in my footsteps. I am very proud of him," says Eugene, a design technician.

Eugene learnt the hard way that training for the Comrades Marathon is not something to take lightly. In 1985 when he did his first Comrades, he realised that he will not be able to complete the race in time and gave up. He had an hour left to complete 10 km.

"The following year I went back after training more than 1 200 km."

Eugene's family supports him all the way. This year Manette had "Comrades Supporter" T-shirts made for them.

When Eugene is not training, he likes watching rugby. He is a Lions supporter. 🇿🇦

Port Elizabeth Railway Station is a pigsty

The once proud 144-year-old Port Elizabeth Railway Station is an operational smelling dump, that poses a life-threatening risk to those who utilise it daily.

In August 2019, it will be eight years after a gas pipe explosion caused extensive damage to part of the building, making it completely unsafe for humans to occupy. To date this part of the building is supported with steel construction stands that prevent the building from collapsing.

These stands are situated in front of the building where commuters and employees of the Passenger Rail Agency of South Africa (Prasa) must pass to get to and from the entrance of the station.

UNTU President, Wyndham Evans, sent a delegation of the Executive Council and the Secretariat to the station to investigate the working conditions of UNTU members after UNTU's Vice-President, Hendrik Fourie, brought complaints to his attention.

According to Wyndham, he is shocked at the feedback he received from his team. "UNTU cannot and will not allow its members to continue to work in these appalling conditions. Just looking at the photos taken of the building, you can see that there are contraventions of the Health and Safety Act," says Wyndham.

In some of the offices where Prasa employees are expected to work, pieces of the roof shatter onto their desks from time to time. On the stairs there is debris that has fallen from the ceiling.

The building most likely had a coat of paint back in August 1985 when the former South African Transport Services renovated and re-opened the station.

Sections of the roof have holes and several windows within the building are broken. It is also clear that the plumbing has not been attended to in recent years.

"It is so humiliating and demoralising coming to work and having to tell people that you have to work in a place that looks like a pigsty. We are falling ill because of these unhygienic working conditions," an UNTU member explained.

"Over the years, several of the employees have laid anonymous complaints with the Department of Labour about the health hazards within the building but the inspectors of Labour have not taken any action against Prasa management," the member added.

The station was designed by a resident engineer, James Bisset. The station became operational in 1875 when the first railway line was constructed to Uitenhage about 40 km away.

No word from Prasa

UNTU President Wyndham Evans wrote to Dr Nkosi-nathi Sishi, Acting Group Chief Executive Officer of Prasa, on 15 May. Dr Sishi did not respond. The leadership of UNTU brought the matter and Dr Sishi's lack of response to the serious safety concerns raised by Wyndham, to the attention of the Board of Prasa. The Board has also not taken action yet.

The station is situated right next to the world-famous historic Campanile tower that was erected to commemorate the landing of the 1820 Settlers. The Campanile tower is a popular tourist attraction.

Speak up against any abuse, harassment

Women must speak up against abuse of any kind, harassment of any kind and bullying irrespective of where they experience it. This is the message from Tumelo (Tumi) Mokoena, UNTU Trade Union Representative (TUR) and assistant train driver at Transnet Freight Rail in Ogies, Mpumalanga.

“The biggest changes in life come from someone who had the courage to take a stand. That is what more women should do,” says the 28-year-old autistic guitar player who started performing in church when she was 14 years old.

Tumi wanted to become a musician but ended up working for Transnet after she applied with an SMS message.

She joined UNTU and decided to stand as a TUR because she believed she has a gift of standing up and fighting for people. “I genuinely care about the welfare of each member. My biggest highlight was having gotten a dismissed employee reinstated.”

“The biggest changes in life come from someone who had the courage to take a stand.”

~ Tumi Mokoena ~

Tumi would like to have UNTU Executive Council Members visit members at the more remote depots like Ogies more often and attend their branch meeting to listen to the issues they experience on ground level.

“We want to feel that the highest leadership understands the challenges we are faced with and knows who we are. Sometimes it feels that our concerns are falling on deaf ears,” says Tumi.

This was brought to the attention of Wyndham Evans, President of UNTU, who arranged to visit the depot at his earliest convenience.

According to Tumi nothing beats UNTU’s excellent communication strategy to keep members informed of developments on national level.

She is also very grateful to the Union for the excellent training she received as a TUR from Dan Khumalo, Deputy General Secretary. “I am confident when I represent a member. We have good employees in Ogies and don’t have a lot of cases. But when we do need to represent members, our track record speaks for itself,” she says.

Tumi is aiming to become a train control officer. She is intrigued by the mysterious surroundings in which they work and believe it is an excellent skill to further her career.

When Tumi is not at work, she visits her family and like to go on picnics often. “I also go to the movies once a week.”

From teaching dolls to making a difference

When she was a little girl, Chantelle Swart used to pack all her teddies and dolls in the passage and walk up and down to teach to them.

Now Chantelle Swart (23), the daughter of Peet Swart, Executive Council Member, teaches Gr. 2 learners at a private school in Alberton on the East Rand.

She graduated from the University of the Witwatersrand (Wits) in March.

"I have a passion for children and for teaching. I wanted to become a teacher since I was nine years old. For me, this is a dream come true," she says.

Chantelle prefers the little ones where she can still help to shape them. "I feel that I can make a difference in their lives."

Mathematics was her favourite subject growing up and it is also her favourite subject to teach today. Her golden rule is to ensure that she is well prepared for each day.

"The lessons that I teach are worked out and scheduled a term in advance. That does not mean that I can sit back and enjoy the day. I need to prepare the raw material in advance and research the subject well. Children can ask the most awkward questions at the most inappropriate time. You need to prepare for a vast variety in order to avoid standing in front of them with a red face."

She also coaches netball after school. Chantelle says she never participated in the sport. "I played hockey when I was at school. The school where I am employed, does not have hockey teams so I had to learn netball instead." 🏐

Caston Michael

Caston set on playing for the Springbok rugby team

Caston Michael (17) is set on running out for the Springbok rugby team one day and becoming a professional rugby player.

He has just been selected to participate in the annual Craven Week rugby tournament organised for schoolboys.

"I love rugby. That is all I do and all I want to do. I work very hard to achieve my dream. I practise for hours after school," he says. He is a wing.

According to his mother, UNTU planning official for Transnet Port Terminals in Cape Town, Natasha Michael, Caston started playing rugby when he was 11 years old. Before his fourteenth birthday he was selected to play in the Under-13 Craven Week rugby tournament.

Caston also participates in the 100 m athletics.

After school he is planning on studying sport science. 🏉

Limited progress for women in workplace

South Africa has not made significant strides to ensure that women are represented in senior positions. Year after year, research shows that most senior executives in South Africa are men. In July last year, only one of the Johannesburg Stock Exchange Top 40 companies had a female chief executive.

As many as 20% of South African companies have no women in senior roles. Although women represent more than half of the country's population, women executives are underrepresented and underpaid.

The situation in our country is not unique. According to research published by McKinsey in the USA, the number of women in management will increase by only 1% over the next decade if companies continue to hire and promote women at current rates.

The World Economic Forum's (WEF) 2017 Global Gender Report findings revealed that gender parity is more than 200 years away. South Africa is ranked 19th in the global index report on gender inequality, with men still earning 2% more than women.

According to another study conducted at the University of Johannesburg, the South African gender pay gap is estimated, on average, to be between 15% and 17%. One of the implications in this regard is that a South African woman would have to work two months more than a man to earn the equivalent salary he would earn in a year.

This is also a global phenomenon. Norway is the country with the least gender inequality while Saudi Arabia is the worst followed by Indonesia.

Sexual harassment also continues to pervade the workplace globally. While it is true that most companies have policies that make it clear sexual harassment won't be tolerated, many employees think their companies are not sufficiently putting policies into practice.

According to a recent publication by the International Labour Organisation (ILO) titled Ending violence and harassment in the world of work it should be rare for a woman to be the only person at their managerial level.

Employers must ensure that hiring and promotions are fair and don't make assumptions about what women with families want or don't want.

This can be achieved by offering employees flexibility and considering creative ways to bring women who have taken a break in their career back into the workplace. 🌱

DOMESTIC VIOLENCE: A GROWING EPIDEMIC

Domestic violence is a growing and widespread epidemic common in South Africa. The country has one of the highest incidences of domestic violence in the world.

On average, one in five South African women older than 18 has experienced physical violence, but the picture of gender-based attacks varies according to marital status and wealth. Four in 10 divorced or separated women reported physical violence, as has one in three women in the poorest households.

This complex picture not only challenges societal attitudes of patriarchy and chauvinism, but also the effectiveness of government programmes and interventions.

It is reasoned that this is because most women had no other alternative than to remain or return to the care of their abuser.

This tendency was highlighted in the recent domestic violence incident where artist Bongekile “Babes Wodumo” were assaulted by her boyfriend, Mandla “Mampintsha” Maphumulo during her live social media broadcast.

Several ministers and celebrities pleaded with Babes Wodumo not to return to Mampintsha. He alleged that she came home drunk and hit him first. Later he apologised to her and the South African public for hitting her and promised to seek professional help. She stated that she lost a friend in 2017 because of abuse and started using the hashtag #I'mwalkingaway.

Weeks after the much-publicised incident, the couple released a new song titled Khona lyngane Lay'Ndlini (meaning “There are children in the house”). This caused outrage on social media and Babes Wodumo was heavily criticised for returning to her boyfriend and agreeing to be featured in the song.

According to Lisa Vetten, researcher and a Mellon Doctoral Candidate based at the Wits City Institute of the University of the Witwatersrand, government is not doing enough to ensure adequate provision of shelters for abused women in South Africa.

According to the findings of a research project of the National Shelter Movement of South Africa (NSM) and the Heinrich Boell Foundation's (HBF) there is not enough political will to prioritise the protection of vulnerable women in the country.

Vetten says gender-based violence (GBV) shelters are underfunded, especially in Limpopo, North West and the Free State. The Department of Social Development currently funds 140 shelters for gender-based violence, but research shows that only half of these shelters accommodate women escaping domestic violence.

As we commemorate Women's Month in August as a tribute to the more than 20 000 women who marched to the Union Buildings on 9 August 1956 in protest of the extension of Pass Laws to women, think about the victims of domestic violence whose pain is met with silence. 🌱

Historic strike for rail safety

History will be made on 26 July when all South Africans can take hands and join UNTU, with the support of our affiliated federation, Fedusa, to bring the country to a complete standstill to force government to provide a safe and reliable passenger rail service.

This historic moment will cut across all walks of life, age, race, political and union orientation with one common goal: to provide all South Africans with a world-class passenger rail system that remains the safest and cheapest form of public transport.

During this strike action, all those participating will contribute to alleviate poverty and the unacceptable high levels of inequality in our country by making it possible for more South Africans to get and retain decent jobs.

The Section 77 certificate has been granted on the specific merits of an economic impact and implication. It therefor protects all South Africans to embark on a protected strike and protest campaign due to the direct impact of the poor service of Prasa.

Thembinkosi Mkhali, Chief Director at the Department of Labour, stated on behalf of the Steering Committee that Nedlac agrees that the state of rail safety is a very important and a very serious issue which can only be addressed by the President himself.

Culture of “making do” undermines safety

The culture in the train operations of the Passenger Rail Agency of South Africa (Prasa) to “work around” manual authorisation and “making do” with what is needed to maintain a passenger rail service, undermines safety standards.

This is consistent with the management of Prasa who puts pressure on the operational teams to sustain the levels of service and complicates fault reporting.

These findings were made in a recently published international study of Chris W Johnson and Christine Shea on the role of degraded modes of operation in the causes of accidents in rail and air traffic management.

According to the abstract, degraded modes of operations occur when technological systems fail to meet the levels of service that are expected by staff and managers.

“Over time, operators develop ‘work arounds’ that help them to cope with these degraded modes. This had led to a culture of ‘making do’ where co-workers try their best to maintain service provision despite system failures.”

The “making do” and “work arounds” undermine safety because services continue to be operated without key elements of the supporting infrastructure.

According to the study, organisations such as Prasa, place undue emphasis on operational priorities that persuade staff to continue service provision even when safety is jeopardised.

“Degraded modes of operation accidents are more likely to occur particularly if employees acting under the imperative of on-time running are trying to have the infrastructure perform more efficiently than it is capable of doing.”

Furthermore, it can be difficult for operational staff and maintenance teams to accurately convey their tasks and priorities to co-workers who have little experience or understanding.

It was found that abnormal or increased loadings can be tolerated for short periods provided that potential hazards have been identified and appropriate mitigations have been introduced. 🌱

“All workers, whether or not they are commuters or employees of Prasa, should feel safe when they are travelling on trains. Even if only one person dies, it is one too many,” Mkhali said.

According to him, Nedlac is not of the opinion that a strike or any type of protest action will solve this crisis, and that a solution will only be obtained if all parties commit to finding it.

However, Nedlac has reached the end of the road because the Steering Committee does not have the power to force the Presidency, the South African Police Service (SAPS) or the South African National Defence Force (SANDF) to participate in its process. Prasa is a state-owned enterprise funded with taxpayer’s money.

The ongoing efforts of the SAPS and Prasa has no impact on ground level. The situation has deteriorated to such an extent that the President was asked to call out a National State of Emergency. Despite his personal promise to UNTU to consider the demands, President Ramaphosa never responded to it. Fedusa also called for the SANDF to be deployed to safeguard platforms for commuters which could have led to an increase to Prasa’s rapidly declining revenue which is now a third less than three years ago.

Fedusa also called for the SANDF to be deployed to safeguard state infrastructure while the police should be forced to prioritise rail safety. 🌱

UNTU offers the protection you need

In UNTU I have a big brother protecting me at work.” This is according to Lungile Mdluli (30), an administrative official in the safety department of Transnet Freight Rail (TFR) in Witbank.

“UNTU’s Trade Union Representatives can make things happen. I love the unity in the Union. I never get into trouble, but it is nice to know my back is covered.”

She wanted to become a traffic official when she grew up in Barberton in Mpumalanga. After school Lungile studied information technology and obtained a certificate.

“I wanted to further my studies, but my mother could no longer afford it. I had to start working and I got a job as a train assistant at Transnet.”

SATAWU was first to recruit Lungile and her colleagues. “Soon I realised my mistake. I had the flu and I drank cough syrup with alcohol in it during the night. The next morning I had to do the routine breathalyser. I blew red.

“I was in shock. I could not believe it. My then SATAWU representative said there was nothing he could do for me. According to him I knew what I did and was guilty as charged. It was a dismissible offence and I had to defend myself in my disciplinary hearing.

“Back then I did not understand the policy to a zero-tolerance for alcohol. I knew that you were not allowed to be drunk at work, but I was not drunk and only used the syrup. I did not eat at all that day.”

Lungile managed to defend herself successfully. She was offered a twelve-month final written warning. “I was so relieved that I was off the hook, that I saw to it that I never make another mistake again. I resigned at SATAWU with immediate effect and joined UNTU.”

A few years later Lungile shamed SATAWU when she discovered that deductions were being made unlawfully on their behalf. After a thorough investigation by Transnet, it emerged that she had uncovered a fraudulent SATAWU Trade Union Representative.

Lungile believes more should be done to develop women and the youth both in Transnet and in UNTU.

“Our future depends on constant learning and developing ourselves to our full potential. All of us need to develop a diverse set of skills to equip us in the workplace.”

Lungile obtained a certificate in risk management through Unisa last year and sees herself growing into the risk management department.

She is a single mother to a seven-year-old son. 🌟

Educating communities about safety

Tebogo Maloba, a specialist train control officer at Transnet Freight Rail Pyramid South, is not your normal 21-year-old.

She has a passion to ensure that safety comes first, at work and in her community in Theresapark, Pretoria.

Tebogo obtained her national diploma in safety management in March this year and is currently busy with her BTech degree.

“I realise one of our biggest drawbacks is that we don’t have a culture of safety. We don’t realise that by littering we are putting our safety in danger. There are too many gaps in the training provided on safety by the employer and employees are not educated well enough on the importance of putting safety first.

“By putting safety first, we enhance the productivity of the company, we improve our personal well-being and it is conducive to the environment.”

She decided to make a difference by offering her service to educate communities about safety at various non-profit organisations.

“I want to leave a legacy for my four-year-old son. I want to teach him that education is his key to open doors, to be independent, to remain humble and to have principles and beliefs. He must do all of this while always putting safety first,” she says.

Tebogo Maloba

Juggling between being a single mother, work, studies and volunteer work is not a big challenge for Tebogo.

“It is all about making sacrifices and planning your time very well. I plan a week in advance and stick to my schedule. I have time for my son, I have time to jog twice a day, I eat healthy and I drink lots of water.”

Tebogo sees herself growing into a training and mentoring position in Transnet.

When she is not working, she loves cooking, reading and going to church. 🌟

Former Springbok visits UNTU Palms

Former Springbok lock, Rudi “Vleis” Visagie, was a guest at UNTU Palms earlier this year. He is considered as one of the greatest South African rugby players of all time. Cobus van Aswegen, maintenance manager of UNTU Palms, is a huge fan and made him feel right at home.

TUR Reuben is no ordinary young man

Reuben Maseko, UNTU Trade Union Representative (TUR) in Witbank in Mpumalanga, is no ordinary young man. He is very disciplined and does not believe in short cuts. He works hard to reach the top.

Reuben (28) is the chief shed man at the Witbank Depot. Growing up he dreamt of becoming a boilermaker as he was surrounded by boilermakers.

After completing his matric, Reuben started working as a quality controller. He had a hunger to further his studies and to achieve more.

"Six months later I got a job at Transnet as a train assistant and worked hard for my promotion to chief shed man."

He is a very dedicated and loyal UNTU member.

"I can see that my Union goes to quite an extent to train its TURs so that we are able to enhance the service and assistance we provide to our members. This enables TURs like me to assist members to overcome obstacles they might face in the workplace."

Reuben loves assisting his fellow employees. "There is no greater reward than seeing people go home at the end of the day, having gotten what they wanted."

He believes UNTU is way ahead in the game when it comes to transparency with its finances and mandating process. "I can see my vote counts."

Reuben would like the Union to do more to specifically develop youth and to assist young employees to develop within the Union structures.

He is not a pastor, but his community and his fellow colleagues think he is.

"That is because I am different from the average young men of my age. I go to church.

"I am the secretary of a non-profit organisation, New Way Youth, that assist young people to find employment, to stay away from drugs and to fight against any form of abuse. We also assist young people in townships around Witbank with career guidance. Young people don't know what they want to become," he says.

Reuben is married and is the father of two boys aged 5 and 7.

When he is not working, he loves to work with wood in his garage.

"I can sit there the whole day, making furniture. It is very creative and relaxing. I also enjoy going fishing from time to time," he says. 🐟

Reuben Maseko

Not just another number at UNTU

UNTU is Thabang Thabete's (33) Union of choice because it takes excellent care of and listens to its membership on ground level.

"I was one of the UNTU members who complained about the quality of the golf shirt that was given to members. UNTU leadership took note of the members' complaints and improved the quality of the T-shirt given to new members.

"That is what I love about my Union. I have a voice. My voice counts. I am not just another number when it comes to my Union."

Thabang also learned not to be misled by the lies spread by rival unions about UNTU to try and get members to join them.

"In 2010 after the strike at Transnet, members of SATAWU convinced me that UNTU sold us out and that we would get a 15% wage increase if we continue with the strike. I resigned and joined SATAWU. But I realised my mistake four days later and returned to my home before SATAWU could even make the first deduction," says Thabang.

Thabang grew up in Dennilton in Limpopo and wanted to become an electrical engineer. He got a bursary through Transnet and is currently working as a Yard Official.

He feels that Transnet does not recognise him. He trained new recruits, but they were promoted instead of him. This discouraged him.

Thabang has now decided to use a

Thabang Thabete

Transnet bursary to qualify himself in another field.

He would like to get visits from the leadership of the Union during wage negotiations to ensure members have a realistic view of what to expect.

According to Thabang there is no comparison in the treatment UNTU Trade Union Representatives receive from their members compared to rival unions. "Our Union takes great care of us."

When this father of three girls is not working, he loves to watch cricket or go fishing at the Witbank dam. 🐟

Win one of three CD's!

Three lucky UNTU members stand a chance to win the latest CD of Tsonga traditional artist, Captain Gacheni.

Duncan Matje (29) aka Captain Gacheni will gift the CD's to the first three UNTU members who send an e-mail to enquiries@untu.co.za with the title of his new CD.

The title was revealed on the front page of UNTU's previous Labour Report.

Duncan is a track worker at Prasa Perway in Pretoria West and is a hard-working UNTU Trade Union Representative (TUR). 🐟
